1. WHAT ARE COOKIES? | COOKIES USED ON THIS WEBSITE | CONSENT

Cookies are small text files that websites visited by users send to their terminals, where they are stored to be retransmitted to the same websites on subsequent visits. Cookies are used for different purposes, have various characteristics, and can be set either by the website owner or by third parties. For more information about cookies, please visit www.allaboutcookies.org.

2. EXAMPLES OF SIMILAR TECHNOLOGIES

User browsing activity can also be tracked using technologies similar to cookies. Below are some examples.

LocalStorage

This is a technology used to optimize navigation, which does not collect data about user preferences (e.g., it stores a code identifying the user's session after login, to avoid requiring the user to re-enter their username and password on each page when accessing restricted areas).

Tracking Pixel

Also known as a "tracking code" or "monitoring code," this is a small piece of code provided by some systems and implemented into others to track certain data related to the user and their browsing session or email interactions, completely transparently to the user. The data tracked can vary widely, including date and time, geographic location, the type of device used for browsing, and — in more advanced tracking pixels — even the value of a purchase order and other information useful for marketing departments of the companies using them.

Plugin

A plugin is a program that interacts with another program to enhance or extend its original functionalities. The most commonly used plugins are those from social networks, which allow users, for example, to follow a page or social media profile with a single click, to like a piece of web content, or to share it on their own social media profiles, and so on.

Widget

A widget is a graphical user interface component of a program designed to facilitate user interaction with the program itself. The most commonly used widgets are those from social networks, which allow users to easily open social media platforms in a separate browser window.

These services enable interactions with social networks or other external platforms directly from a website's pages. Any interactions and information possibly collected by the website are subject to the privacy settings of the third party that created these technologies.

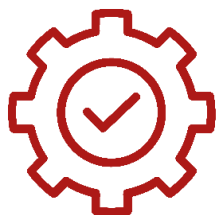

For detailed information pursuant to Article 19 of the Personal Data Protection Act regarding the use of personal data when using these technologies, we invite you to visit the websites of the third-party providers responsible for managing these technologies.
